President Blumer Comments

Dear Friend:

During this past year as part of a periodic review to the Middle States Accreditation Association, many members of the Lycoming College community were asked to pause and give serious thought to their specific responsibilities as educators. After clarifying and evaluating our activities, we were then asked to prepare a plan which would meet the educational needs of our students in the next decade. It was a stimulating task and also one which is vital for us because we must continually strive to improve. In future issues of the Lycoming Quarterly, we will be sharing these plans with you.

I left this experience proud. To observe a rededication to our mission as a small, independent, church-affiliated institution was refreshing. Our continuing commitment to the liberal arts is the cornerstone of Lycoming's educational contribution to society.

At Lycoming College we believe that speaking, counting, reasoning, listening, seeing and feeling are basic and necessary ingredients for the quality of life we seek to achieve as a civilized population. Our dedication to the liberal arts helps free us from ignorance, superstition and unreasoning prejudice. Through education our eyes are opened to an appreciation of beauty and the love of learning.

As we prepare to celebrate our 175th year of continuous educational service, we are deeply grateful to our benefactors whose gifts allow this institution to serve with integrity in the field of education. With your continued involvement we will find the strength to face successfully the many challenges that lie ahead.

On behalf of the entire campus community, I thank you for helping make Lycoming College a good place for students to learn.

Sincerely,

President

LYCOMING'S HPAC . . .

Building A Reputation

By: Molly Sue Wentz

During the past decade, over 80% of the Lycoming College students who applied to medical school have been accepted. The guiding force behind these students is the Health Professions Advisory Committee (HPAC), which was organized 15 years ago to assist pre-med students during their four years of undergraduate study at Lycoming College.

Dr. Robert Zaccaria, associate professor of biology, is chairman of the seven member committee of professors and professional staff. The committee advises students in their choice of a medical career and provides them with information on graduate program admission requirements for various professional schools. Dr. Zaccaria attributes the program's success to the following: individual student attention; no specific course sequence, which allows academic achievement at a student's own rate; and many opportunities for student internships.

"When I first met Dr. Zaccaria, he sounded me out to see if I really wanted medicine or if I would be more apt at some other form of training."

The HPAC presents the health professions as a group to the pre-health advisees. This group, dubbed "MODVOP professions," consists of the health care fields that require doctoral-level training: (allopathic) medicine, osteopathic medicine, dentistry, veterinary medicine, optometry, and podiatric medicine.

Building the foundation toward a strong medical background in one of the "MODVOP professions" begins when students meet the HPAC members during an orientation meeting where the committee familiarizes itself with each student.

Frank O'Brien, M.D., a Lycoming College graduate currently working in the Department of Orthopaedics at Geisinger Medical Center in Danville, Pa., remembers his first meeting with the HPAC.

"When I first met Dr. Zaccaria, he sounded me out to see if I really wanted medicine or if I would be more apt at some other form of training," O'Brien recalls.

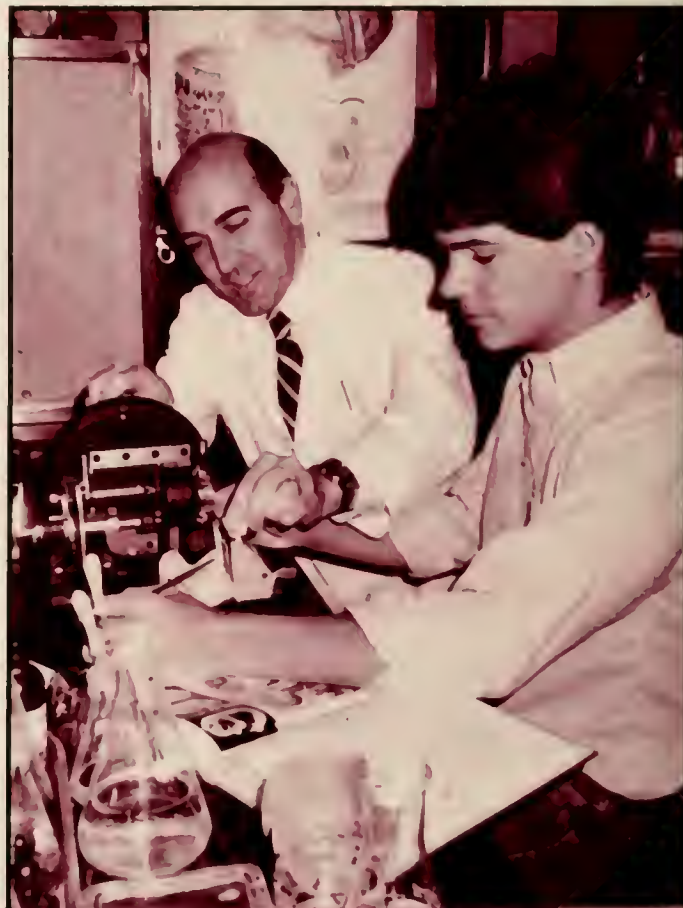

Academic advisement continues through a student's senior year. Each student's strengths and weaknesses are pinpointed and discussed at professor-student conferences. The advisors help with course selection by first discussing, and then arranging, the sequence most beneficial for the student. They track the student's choice of realistic career goals and academic preparation necessary to reach each goal.

Cooperative accelerated programs in optometry and podiatry are available for the highly motivated students with interests in these fields. A student in one of these programs attends Lycoming College for three years and then gains early entry into graduate school. Upon successful completion of the first year of professional training, the student earns the B.A. degree from Lycoming.

The HPAC encourages students to get as much hands-on experience as possible while undergraduates. "It is very important to educate undergraduates in the specific things they can do to enhance their desirability to a prospective medical college," O'Brien believes. Through SHARE (Students Having A Real Experience), internships, and undergraduate research programs, students can better evaluate and decide what area they want to build as a career. Dr. Zaccaria also encourages students to gain as much experience as possible to help them determine the branch of medicine eventually chosen.

The SHARE program is an opportunity for students to get a taste of the working world. Students spend three hours a week for six weeks observing and working in the general routine of a job they might like to hold in a future career.

Dr. Robert Zaccaria (left) instructs biology major Tony Harlacher '87 during his independent study. Harlacher's interest in attending dental school prompted him to study the embryonic and fetal development of the oral structures in mice.

Our faculty has been very successful placing students in internships. "To my knowledge, no student desiring an internship has ever been turned down," says Zaccaria. He continues, "One reason for this, and a reason for our students' personal success in gaining admission to health professions schools of their choice, is that Lycoming is the only four-year college in Williamsport and there are two large, comprehensive health care facilities—Williamsport Hospital and Divine Providence Hospital—within walking distance of the school."

"It is also significant that many of our students have done such extensive undergraduate research projects that their research requirement in the first year of medical school has been waived."

One of the characteristics that sets excellent liberal arts colleges apart from other colleges is the attention given to undergraduate research in the sciences. Many students at Lycoming participate in undergraduate research and independent studies directed by Lycoming faculty members. As a supervisor of biology research projects, Dr. Zaccaria offers two approaches to the independent studies projects: allowing the students to select their own topics or having the student work on a continuing study in an ongoing research problem.

The study of salamander pigmentary patterns, now in its seventh year, has been one area of on-going undergraduate research. Dr. Zaccaria likes to involve students in on-going projects because the major technical problems have already been worked out. This allows students to accomplish much more significant work in the duration of a semester or two. Most of the faculty have on-going research projects in which students can take part.

Once students are involved in additional research, they are encouraged to submit papers and compete for awards at meetings of the Eastern Colleges Science Conference, the Beta Beta Beta National Biological Honor Society, or the Pennsylvania Academy of Sciences. In the past five years, Lycoming has had five such prizes; three were won by students working with Dr. Zaccaria.

"It is also significant that many of our students have done such extensive undergraduate research projects that their research requirement in the first year of medical school has been waived. Hershey Medical School, for example, a first choice for many of our students, has a research requirement which must be met in the summer following the first year of medical school. Almost every one of our students attending Hershey Medical School has been able to waive that requirement based on their work completed at Lycoming," Zaccaria says.

O'Brien believes that other activities, in addition to internships and extra undergraduate study, are important. "Doing volunteer work in a local hospital so you can see the interactions of the medical institution and to participate in a physician's daily rounds is a valuable experience," O'Brien points out.

Through these various types of extra study offered at the college, students do enhance their desirability to prospective medical schools. Lycoming College is continually improving its reputation for excellence in the preparation of pre-professional students, according to Dr. Zaccaria. Lycoming alumni in the medical professions schools say that their peers and professors know about Lycoming because its graduates are well prepared for entering their graduate training.

For Dr. Zaccaria, the most time-consuming part of being the HPAC Chairman is preparing the supporting materials to accompany the application of the junior student. The committee sends a composite recommendation letter prepared from faculty evaluation forms to the professional schools; writes a personal letter for each student, including a summary of the student's activities, experiences, and volunteer work; and includes a master grid describing the student's personality and habits.

"One of the characteristics that sets excellent liberal arts colleges apart from other colleges is the attention given to undergraduate research in the sciences."

Ralph J. Wentz '83, who will be entering his fourth year at the Pennsylvania College of Podiatric Medicine in Philadelphia this fall, says, "Dr. Zaccaria's letter gives a very holistic picture of the student." Wentz, a member of the PCPM Board of Admissions, has found Lycoming's composite letter of recommendation, completed by the HPAC, to be one of the best he has ever seen from any college or university.

Lynette L. Layton, D.D.S, a 1978 graduate of Lycoming and a graduate of the University of North Carolina School of Dentistry, agrees with Wentz. "The composite letter of recommendation from the HPAC presents a more accurate reflection of a student's ability than separate letters from only a few faculty. It also gives Dr. Zaccaria the opportunity to evaluate the student's overall performance," Layton believes.

The continued support the HPAC provides the students does make the difference. The students know, that once their goals are clearly set, they will be given every opportunity to reach them. Lycoming's excellent reputation will continue to grow as more students reach their goals.

Talking, Thinking, Writing: The Writing Center at Lycoming College

By: Daniel Hartsock

Genesis Of The Writing Center

Study skills centers have been part of college and university curriculums for decades, but writing centers or labs are a relatively new development emerging from recent educational and social needs as well as contemporary theories about education and learning. Open admissions, increased television viewing, declining standards at the secondary level, and numerous other trends of the sixties and seventies created problems in education that demanded new ways of looking at old solutions to persistent problems. Collaborative learning, a new term for peer tutoring, became a part of our professional jargon due to the trend-setting work of Ken Bruffee of Brooklyn College. In his text A Short Course in Writing, first published in 1972 and now in its third edition, Bruffee brought together the writing center and collaborative learning. With Bruffee's work came the realization that writing centers could truly be placed where students could help students develop writing competence. This prompted a growing number of scholars and graduate students to begin investigating the field. As a result of the successful implementation of their research findings, the years from 1977 to 1981 witnessed the acceptance and subsequent growth of the writing center as an invaluable educational resource.

In their text The Writing Laboratory, Joyce Steward and Mary Croft have made this point especially clear by reporting the following chronology.

1969—A search of professional journals turned up only one article on writing labs published during the year.

1977—The Writing Lab Newsletter began publication with 60 subscribers.

1980—A search of professional journals turned up 163 items on writing labs published during the year.

1981—The Writing Center Journal began publication. The Writing Lab Newsletter listed 900 subscribers.

1984—Writing Lab Directory was published, listing labs in 40 states.

This period saw Lycoming's faculty and administrators become increasingly concerned about the quality of student writing and students' attitudes about writing. These concerns led the English Department to institute two programs designed to foster improved attitudes about writing and writing itself. One such program was a two-track composition course which allowed students to choose between composition classes for the liberal arts and for business and science. The other was a developmental program intended to improve students basic thinking and writing skills before they entered English composition. Though both programs were successful, they failed to influence students' long-term attitudes about the significance of writing largely because the courses came to be perceived as freshman courses, irrelevant to everything but the freshman year. This attitude was especially prevalent since many students could avoid writing in other courses.

The recognition that students needed to write throughout their college careers to improve their writing and learning skills and attitudes led to a unified effort by the faculty and administration to turn the tide for literacy at Lycoming. The Writing Committee, organized in 1981 to assess the writing situation at Lycoming, began a four-year study project resulting in the inception of a writing across the curriculum program. Lycoming students will now be required to write in all distribution courses and to enroll in two writing-intensive courses, one of which will be in the major. We believe that this program will encourage students to regard writing as an effective learning tool relevant to personal and professional enrichment.

"As a general rule, run your pen through every other word you have written; you have no idea what vigour it will give your style."

Sydney Smith, from Bon-Mots of Sydney Smith

At the very beginning of the study project, the committee realized that a practical measure would have to be taken to complement this new program. To whom, for instance would a student turn for help outside of the classroom. The immediate and obvious answer was a writing center. Since Lycoming was entering the writing center world at a time of increasing scholarship, we could take advantage of the abundance of professional literature to assure our success. To make this material available to us, the committee completed a second project involving research and travel to study writing centers around the state. Following this investigation, a writing center became an integral part of our writing across the curriculum program and was approved with the program by a vote of the faculty on April 1, 1985.

In fall 1985, the college began start up operations by naming Dan Hartsock as Director of the Writing Center. During the semester, the director, in conjunction with the Writing Committee and with the cooperation of Jack Buckle, Dean of Student Services, located and furnished a space for the center, recruited student tutors, and made other plans for the opening of the center. Then, on January 27, 1986, The Writing Center opened its doors in Rich Hall to the campus community.

A Simple Model

The tutorial process follows a simple model. By assuming that writers know or have the ability to discover what they want to say, tutors can guide them by asking questions that any curious listener (or reader, if what the student has is written down) might ask. To facilitate this technique, tutors use writers' last response as openings for following question.

Through this chain of answers and questions, tutors are able to achieve two important objectives. First, they enable writers to determine the course and content of a discussion. This occurs because tutors are reacting to writers' thoughts or searching to draw out what writers think. Second, and a result of the first, tutors can lead writers to discover solutions to their own problems, solutions that they knew or had the capacity to find but were unable to articulate before the tutorial.

Questioning such as this works equally well when writers and tutors are examining a written text for matters of organization, paragraphing, development, and so on. For example, tutors might ask writers to explain the difference between what each paragraph in a sequence of paragraphs does and what each says to determine whether the sequence is well organized. If the writer is not satisfied with the text after this analysis, the tutor might ask which other arrangements or ideas might be included to improve the piece. Or, the tutor might ask the writer to state an idea in several ways to gain perspective on which one communicates best. In all cases, the tutor serves to awaken the writer's awareness that there are a number of alternatives from which to choose. By guiding the writer to make these choices, the tutor properly relinquishes responsibility for the writing to the writer and brings the writer a step closer to independence in writing.

The most significant result of this tutoring experience lies not so much in the "answer" itself as in the writer's exposure to the questioning process by which peer tutor and student writer discover solutions. It is the goal of our center that writers will learn this process and so become better thinkers and writers as they assume responsibility for their education.

Writing Center Services

The writing center at Lycoming does more than train tutors to work with student writers. Since many college students continue to have difficulty with spelling, punctuation, and other mechanical matters, we schedule a series of grammar workshops each semester followed by individual assistance during writing center hours. And to lessen students' confusion with documentation styles, the center will have available a brief booklet comparing the most often used footnote and bibliographical formats appropriate for classroom work. Perhaps our most important service, second only to tutoring, is our Writing Room, a quiet place where writers can work on projects while a tutor is nearby if needed. Dormitory life, though advantageous for many reasons, is sometimes a troublesome studying environment for inexperienced writers. Many find that they write best in relative quiet. To provide students with a quiet, comfortable environment for writing, we established the Writing Room.

The center is available for faculty as well as students. Lycoming faculty can seek the advice of the center and its director in planning courses, designing writing assignments or grading strategies, and preparing their own work for publication. Also, the center serves as a training resource for faculty. During spring 1986, the center and the Writing Committee held a series of writing workshops for faculty to help prepare them for the new writing program. We invited colleagues from Beaver College, West Chester University, and Penn State to conduct workshops on incorporating writing in the disciplines. These training workshops will be an integral component of our writing program at Lycoming.

The Future

Will The Writing Center be a successful educational venture? Let me share with you the results of The Writing Center's Evaluation Questionnaire distributed to those students who visited the center during our first semester of operation. Students are, after all, the ones who really know if what we do is worth the time and energy. Of those students who returned questionnaires, 89% were satisfied with our service and as a result would recommend the center to a friend; 100% of the respondents would visit the center again. And finally, here are several encouraging student responses that strengthen our will to serve Lycoming's community of writers.

"I got help immediately."

"... I was able to sit down with the tutor without being on some kind of time limit."

"I was able to create my own questions or situation for any topic I chose."

"The individualized help I received was great."

Daniel Hartsock is director of The Writing Center.

Dan Hartsock, director of The Writing Center, utilizes the tutorial model to determine the course and content of the discussion. This will lead the student to discover solutions that she was unable to articulate before the tutorial.

The Greatest Gift of All

By: Laura LeValley

As a mass communication major at Lycoming College, I have been asked to write many papers during my four years, each displaying its own level of difficulty. But perhaps this personal piece is the most challenging for me. How can you sum up four wonderful years in one article?

If it were not for my parents, I would have never been able to experience the joys of college. They sacrificed many things to put me through school and gave me the opportunity to become a part of the Lycoming community which I will benefit from for the rest of my life. Anyone who has ever gone away to school remembers that dreadful day when your parents delivered you bag and baggage to the place that you would call "home" for the next four years. It was an indescribable feeling, yet little did I know at the time that my parents were giving me the greatest gift that any two people could give to their child: the chance to go to college.

When I reflect on my Lycoming experience, the first thing that enters my mind are the people. They say that a place is only as good as its people, and nothing demonstrates this more effectively than a college community. There were times throughout my four years when I began to wonder if I would ever see graduation day. My work load was heavy and demanding, and the thought of cap and gown was merely a dream in the distant future. At a large university I would have faded into the woodwork; thanks to Lycoming, I never came close. My professors were there to see me through my studies, and always available if I just wanted to talk about a problem or about my dreams and aspirations. They knew me by name, not as a social security number.

These were the people that helped me discover talents and skills that I did not even know existed within myself. So many young people come out of school today and cannot even tell you the names of their professors. To them, class was no more than a monotone voice and a series of computerized exams. I find this sad. The guidance that my professors gave me and the knowledge they shared with me are things I will benefit from for the rest of my life. Not only can I tell you the names of all my professors, I can also truthfully say that I had dinner with the President of Lycoming College and his wife!

"For all the friends I have made, the joys I have felt, and the ability to find my way when I thought I had lost it, I thank you, Lycoming College."

Perhaps this is one of the nicest aspects of being a part of the Lycoming community. The administration is not made up of mere figureheads. Instead, it is composed of concerned human beings, many of whom have guided their own sons and daughters through the college experience.

A professor that I interviewed for the Lycoming Quarterly once told me that "the whole person comes to college, not just the mind." While I was provided with the tools and guidance to grow intellectually, my Lycoming College education provided me with the key to unlock the mystery of what Laura LeValley, the person was really all about.

Many things have transpired since my parents delivered me bag and baggage to the steps of Skeath Hall in 1982. I entered Lycoming College as one person and I left as another. When I look into the mirror today, I no longer see a scared and hesitant freshman. The reflection I see now is of a skilled and confident professional, ready to begin her life beyond Lycoming College. I believe that, in turn, is a reflection on the institution that over the years, has enabled me to like what I see every time I gaze into the mirror.

While life presents us with many trying and difficult situations, one of the hardest things I have ever had to face was saying goodbye to the many people who have become an extension of my family. I truly believe that college is the greatest gift that anyone can receive. While what you do in college is entirely an individual choice, I feel the chance to have experienced such a part of life is something that I will always count my blessing for.

For all the friends I have made, the joys I have felt, and the ability to find my way when I thought I had lost it, I thank you Lycoming College. For the person I have become, I salute you.

Laura LeValley is a May 1986 mass communication graduate.

Pickelner Steers Annual Drive Over Top

In a fiscal year-end report released on June 30th by Dr. Frederick E. Blumer, Lycoming College president, a new record for annual giving was announced. Under the leadership of Lycoming trustee William E. Pickelner, and with the help of approximately 100 volunteers, $284,937 was raised to support the annual fund at the College.

Commenting on Pickelner's assignment, Dr. Blumer said, "Bill is perhaps the most widely known, highly respected fund raiser in the area. We are fortunate to have him on our Board of Trustees and grateful for his willingness to serve as National Chairman of our 1985-86 Lycoming College Fund annual drive."

With an original goal of $255,000, the 1985-86 total of $284,937 establishes a new record for annual support at Lycoming. Discussing the importance of this program, President Blumer emphasized that, "as an independent institution, Lycoming depends on tax-deductible contributions as an important source of revenue which is used to insure that our academic programs remain strong and relevant in a changing world. These gifts are used each year to attract and retain a quality faculty and to provide state-of-the-art facilities and learning resources."

In response to the program's success Bill Pickelner said, "I am so grateful to the many alumni and friends of Lycoming College who responded to our requests this year. I believe people understand the importance of supporting institutions like Lycoming and also realize that each and every contribution helps make the College a better place for students to learn and grow."

Physics Student Receives National Honor

Tania M. Slawecki, a junior physics major from Richboro, PA, was recently selected as the second recipient of the Society of Physics Students Scholarship. She received a grant of $1,000 to help fund her final year of undergraduate study. Ms. Slawecki won the national award in competition with physics students from across the country.

While maintaining a 3.98 grade point average (out of a possible 4.00) she developed an interest in gravitation and will take an independent study course on the topic during her senior year.

In addition to her class work, she serves as a laboratory assistant and a planetarium operator for the Department of Astronomy and Physics, a writing tutor for the Department of English, and a violist with the Williamsport Orchestra.

The Society of Physics Students is the student section of the American Institute of Physics and has 537 chapters on college and university campuses in the United States, Canada, and Puerto Rico.

Board OKs South African Divestment

At its spring meeting the Lycoming College Board of Trustees unanimously approved a resolution to divest the College's investment portfolio of stock in any company doing business in South Africa which has not ratified the Sullivan Principles.

Dr. Frederick E. Blumer, college president, said the board's action "vigorously enforces Lycoming College's opposition to apartheid and the social inequities of that system."

The Sullivan Principles provide guidelines for equal opportunity hiring and employment compensation for Blacks working in South Africa.

ROTC Awards

Three Lycoming College juniors are recipients of two-year Army ROTC scholarships beginning this September. The winners are Kathleen J. Brown, a nursing major from Montclair, NJ, Barbara Zepfel, a nursing major from Reynoldsville, PA, and Kirby Watson, a physics major from Turbotville, PA.

Area Men Appointed To Board

Harold Chapman and Richard Confair, two Williamsport businessmen, were recently elected to three-year terms on the Lycoming College Board of Trustees. They replace John Detwiler and James Law.

Chapman is vice president and national sales manager for Brodart Inc. He is a certified public accountant and has a bachelor of science degree in accounting from Oklahoma State University. A Navy veteran, Chapman is a National Director of the American Library, Friends of the Libraries U.S.A.

Confair is president of Confair Bottling Co., Inc. He has a bachelor of arts degree in business administration from Dartmouth College. An Army veteran, Confair is president of the West Branch Manufacturer's Association, Lycoming Better Homes, Inc. and Penn Developers, Inc. He is also on the board of directors of the Williamsport Hospital, Northern Central Bank, Keystone Financial, Hope Enterprises, the Williamsport-Lycoming County Chamber of Commerce and the Pennsylvania Soft Drink Association.

Lycoming Students Salute The Lady

Amid the roar of trumpets and with red, white and blue balloons filling the air, the eyes of the nation were on Giants' Stadium in East Rutherford, NJ, over the 4th of July. Thousands gathered for the closing ceremonies of Liberty Weekend.

Among the 20,000 member cast were nine Lycoming students who sang as part of the Liberty Chorus. The 500 member chorus was comprised of both young and old, who volunteered their time and voices to salute the Lady in the harbor. The chorus, directed by Dr. James W. Hudson and Carlotta Wilsen, met throughout the month of June at Martin Luther King Jr. High School in Manhattan. They rehearsed extensively at Giant's Stadium over the 4th of July weekend in preparation for the extravagant closing ceremonies.

In addition to singing individual pieces entitled "Remember," "Rejoice," and "Renew," the three-fold theme for the ceremonies, the chorus harmonized behind Kenny Rogers, Patti LaBelle, Willie Nelson and Wayland Jennings. For most chorus members, the highlight of the weekend was the opportunity to meet some of these famous people.

Everyone who participated agreed that the most fulfilling part of the entire experience for them was the pride and honor they felt to have been able to participate in such a moving and patriotic occasion.

So, as the ABC television cameras rolled, the lights came up, and the conductor's baton came down with the first beat of the evening, nine Lycoming students embarked on a most memorable time in their lives, and were particularly proud to be Americans.

1985 Graduate Job Placement

What could be better than a Lycoming College Liberal Arts education? Finding a job with one—and Lycoming graduates seem to have no problem landing jobs.

Recent graduates have entered into a variety of professions including: an internal auditor, foster care counselor, medical technician, logistic engineer, computer programmer, public safety officer, English teacher, and an advertising consultant.

The 1985 annual report shows that 84% of the graduating seniors secured full-time employment. Of the 231 graduates in the class of 1985, 229 were available for employment or advanced study: 192 secured full-time employment or were pursuing further education full-time.

Biology majors placed the highest number of students in graduate schools (40%), with psychology following (21%) in placement. Accounting placed 100% of its graduates in jobs in their specific major.

Other majors with above average placement included: art (80%), business (90%), computer science (92%), English (87%), history (87%), and sociology (91%). Accounting, chemistry, economics, philosophy, physics, political science, and Spanish all achieved 100% placement of their graduates.

Lycoming attracts over 25 businesses for campus recruitment each year. "Some on-campus recruiters have an alumni connection and they keep coming back year after year to give Lycoming College graduates an interview," according to JoAnne Day, associate dean of career development.

Concert Band—Spring Tour '86

By: Molly Sue Wentz

Editor's Note: Wentz '85, assistant director of public relations, accompanied the band as a flutist and a photographer. She was a four-year band member.

The Spring Tour '86 of the Lycoming College Concert Band was a rewarding experience as 24 musicians participated on a week-long tour through upper New York State and Canada.

The tour itinerary included concerts in Cortland and Kenmore, New York, and Belleville, Oshawa and Toronto, Canada. Our five concerts were well received, with audiences complimenting us with several standing ovations.

Meeting new people during tour is always a highlight. We were introduced to lifestyles that, many times, were different from our own. Even so, band members felt welcome when host families reached out and shared their lives. In turn, the spirit of Lycoming was shared with the hosts.

I recall the minister whose hobby was doll house building. Being a minister usually means living in parishes and never having a home to call your own. To feel more like a family with an established sense of roots, he built a two-story family doll house and is currently decorating it. For the minister and his family, this is the "home" they never had.

While seeing new sights is exciting, trying different foods holds a greater suspense. Band members were always curious what would be for supper. As always, the food was delicious, with the homemade desserts getting the most attention!

Cultural highlights of this year's tour included Niagara Falls, Niagara-on-the-Lake, Toronto (CN Tower, Eaton Centre, and Metro Zoo), and Presqu'île Provincial Park.

Bishop Wertz Award

The Rev. Dr. Harry A. DeWire (L.), retired professor at United Theological Seminary, Dayton, Ohio, recently received the seventh annual Bishop D. Frederick Wertz Award. Lycoming College President Frederick E. Blumer (R) made the presentation. Dr. DeWire was honored for his many years of church service as a teacher and clinical psychologist.

Lycoming's College For Kids

A four-foot freckled freshman? Not exactly, but if you were on campus the week of July 21 - August 1, you might have wondered. The kids with freckles in yellow T-shirts were participants in a new workshop called Lycoming's College for Kids.

Talented young students from grades 3 - 8 participated in a 10-day workshop that exposed them to a variety of classes. From math mania and earth stories to manned space flight, the students learned how to build rockets, play an actor or actress, and watch the behavior of friendly little critters like bees and mice.

"Lycoming's College for Kids was a success," according to Pamela Dill, president of Parents Association for Gifted Children (PAGE). "It was a quality enrichment program. Parents and children came away with a positive image of college. The kids had fun; they got a good feeling from being on campus."

Lycoming biology professor, Mel Zimmerman, coordinated the event and worked with the local PAGE group. "Everyone involved seems happy and the program's success should make it an ongoing event here," Zimmerman says.

On August 1, parent's day, the students displayed their talent. They shot their rockets off at Brandon Park, strutted their stuff on stage, and exhibited their other projects. The workshop was a great warm-up for the students upcoming school year.

Warriors look to repeat winning ways

The 1986 autumn athletic seasons should provide plenty of thrills for Lycoming fans if the Warriors can pick up where they left off in 1985.

The football, soccer and women's cross country teams had their best seasons ever in 1985 while the field hockey team had its best season since 1978.

Frank Girardi's football squad has the unenviable task of attempting to improve on near-perfection: a 10-0 regular season, the 1985 Middle Atlantic Conference championship and the team's first NCAA Div. III playoff appearance.

Girardi, who enters his 15th season as head coach this fall, is, as always, optimistic about the coming campaign. "We have the ingredients to be another good football team. Our goal is to win the MAC championship," Girardi said.

The primary source of optimism is 1985 MAC Player of the Year and honorable mention Little All-American quarterback Larry Barretta, who is on the verge of breaking every passing and total offense mark in the Lycoming record book.

Barretta, a senior and the team's leading returning rusher, has a host of excellent targets to aim at in 1986. Girardi feels his current corps of receivers is the best he has had at Lycoming.

Senior Rich Kessler caught a single-season record 50 passes last year and shared another record, nine TD receptions, with junior tight end James O'Malley. The two will team with fellow 1985 starter Todd Allegretto, a senior split end. In addition, Bob Delescavage and Scott Middlekauff, lettermen who missed last season, return for the 1986 battles.

The defense will feature a linebacking tandem that could be the best in the MAC; Tom Pietrzak, a senior tri-captain and 1984 All-MAC selection, and Dick Kaiser, a junior who replaced the injured Pietrzak for the entire 1985 schedule. The defensive backfield is also solid with the return of starters Joe Harvey, Brian McNamara and Mike Flaherty.

The kicking game should also be the best in the MAC with a pair of three-year starting seniors: Rusty Fricke, an honorable mention Little All-American placekicker in 1984, and Chris Howell, an All-MAC punter the past two seasons.

SOCCER

Scott McNeill also expects plenty of offensive fireworks from his club as the top four scorers and 14 lettermen return from the 1985 club that was the highest scoring (39 goals) and winningest (8-6-1) in school history.

The key to the offense will be sophomore striker Courtney Walters, the only freshman selected to the 1985 MAC Northern Division All-Star team. Walters (8 goals, 8 assists in '85) should receive plenty of help from senior midfielder Paul Sharkey (9 goals, 2 assists), junior midfielder John Cheevers (7 goals, 8 assists) and junior forward Tom Totaro (5 goals, 9 assists).

The defense will be led by co-captains Mike Albano, a senior fullback, and Tom Stinson, a junior goaltender who had two shutouts in his first full season as a starter in 1985.

The Warriors also have the luxury of playing 10 of their 15 contests, including five of their six MAC games, at home as they attempt to set a school record for wins in a season for the third year in a row.

FIELD HOCKEY

Head coach Janis Arp took the Lady Warriors from a 1-8-1 mark in 1984 to a 5-5 log last season, the first non-losing field hockey campaign for Lycoming since 1978, and has 10 of the 11 starters from 1985 back this year.

Seniors Nancy Mabus, Deb Oberg and Annette Antonopoulos and junior Kim Nagle are the key players. Nagle, a 1984 National Field Hockey Festival participant along with Oberg, led the team with four goals and three assists last season.

Sophomore Janice Fitzgerald had three goals in 1985 and returns with fellow letter winners Deb Burkland, Toni Ioppolo, Michelle Savitz and Gayle Schuler.

CROSS COUNTRY

The women's cross country team is coming off a 3-2 dual-meet performance in just its third varsity season, but five runners have graduated. However, head coach Dr. John Piper Jr. welcomes back senior Cathy Gustafson, a consistent team leader the past three years. Other letter winners expected back are sophomore Margie Burba and junior Leslie Breisch.

Unlike the women, the men's cross country squad has six lettermen expected back from 1985's 2-6 team. Junior Sean Cartwright should be one of the top runners along with classmates Dave Calderone, Dave Hauck, and Butch Hunsinger. The other lettermen are senior Steve Leininger and sophomore Mike Colavita.

ALTENDERFER EARNS SECOND ACADEMIC ALL-AMERICAN HONOR

Meg Altenderfer, a 1986 graduate, became the first Lycoming student-athlete to twice earn first-team Academic All-American honors when she was named to the first-team of the 1986 GTE/CoSIDA College Div. Women's At-Large Academic All-American squad this summer. Altenderfer, a four-year star on the Lady Warriors swimming team, was one of two women to repeat on the 10-member first-team. The Reading native graduated summa cum laude with a bachelor of arts degree in mass communication and art in May.

1985-86: Over The Top!

The accompanying reports represent a summary of philanthropic commitments to Lycoming College during the 1985-86 fiscal year. The first chart, Total Gift Income, includes gifts and grants to Lycoming College for all purposes-capital, endowment and operating. The second report, Lycoming College Fund, reflects the gifts and grants provided by a variety of sources to help meet the annual operating obligations of the College.

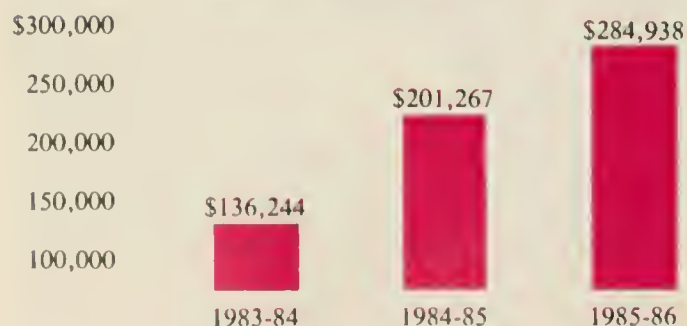

Contributions to the Lycoming College Fund are needed to insure adequate student financial aid, up-to-date learning resources and appropriate faculty salaries.

The third and fourth reports show the growing number of alumni and friends who are making annual contributions to further the educational programs at Lycoming. A new high for participation was achieved and record numbers provided assistance at Leadership Club levels as indicated by the list of gifts and contributions. Every commitment helps the College fulfill its academic mission to provide a quality learning experience for all Lycoming students.

Memorials

During the 1985-86 fiscal year, gifts were received in memory of the following people or for new or established memorial funds.

In memory of:

Dr. Sheridan Bell

Mrs. Laura Schooley Griffith

Mrs. Elizabeth H. King

Rev. L. Dow Ott

The Nathan A. Scheib Memorial Music Fund

The Morton Rauff Memorial Scholarship Fund

Gifts made to Lycoming College in memory of a friend or loved one hold special significance for both the donor and the College. Such gifts are encouraged and fully respected in all regards.

Many alumni and friends make large gifts to the College through a properly prepared will or by a trust arrangement that becomes effective in accord with one's own estate plans. There are annuities and "living" trust arrangements, too, that provide income for life and a deferred gift to the College. Many of our currently endowed scholarships were established in this manner.

LYCOMING COLLEGE

Remembrance Of Things Past

By: Tasso E. Camarinos '34

When it was first suggested that I write about my recollections and reflections as one of the very few students to have attended the Williamsport Dickinson Seminary Elementary and Preparatory Schools and Junior College, I felt somewhat embarrassed. After all, when someone hears that I spent 11 years in one school, he immediately thinks, "What a dumbbell this guy must have been." But, let me tell you how it all happened.

Like all youngsters seven years of age, I had little choice in selecting a school. My father enrolled four of his children in Williamsport Dickinson Seminary. My older brother, Anargyros, was graduated from the seminary in 1922. I was enrolled in the third grade of the elementary school one year later. My sisters, Delia Manos and Sophia Paul spent several years in the Bradley School of Music at the seminary. In the course of time I earned my diploma from the Seminary in 1932 and from the junior college in 1934. As I recall, the elementary grades were discontinued when the institution became accredited as a Junior College. Dr. John Long was president during those eleven years.

In his recent autobiography, Lee Iacocca attributes his success in the business world to those elementary teachers who molded his thinking and especially to those who taught him to communicate. The seminary could well boast of such faculty members. In retrospect, they must have been selected for their fine character, patience and a sincere desire to teach. They were strict, but kind, always emphasizing good conduct and sound values.

I remember with fondness and gratitude Mrs. Lulu Brunstetter. The influence of teachers on young minds cannot be underestimated. Little did Mrs. Brunstetter realize how important the sentence was which she wrote in my fifth grade album. It read like this, "whatever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." At that time I was unaware that the phrase was a direct quotation from the Book of Ecclesiastes. Subconsciously, it has been a guiding principle all through my life.

Miss Minnie Mae Hoooven was another one of my favorite teachers. She was a conscientious, dedicated teacher with 30 years of devoted service at the seminary. It is amusing now to remember the day when she conducted a straw vote during the Herbert Hoover-Alfred Smith presidential campaign. She was dismayed when she learned that I had cast my ballot for "that radical Al Smith," and wanted me to explain why.

Some instructors have a special impact on a student's training. One such professor was George Camp. He disciplined his class to look up the meaning of unfamiliar words and to examine familiar words used in an unfamiliar way. Who can forget our venerable Latin professor, Dr. Elliott Chidsey Armstrong, who spiced his daily teaching with bits of philosophy gleaned from his many years of experience.

By the way, Carl W. Stenberg, Jr., who was very recently installed as Grand Master of Masons in Pennsylvania, was a classmate in the middle 20's.

Many of you are understandably curious about campus life in the 20's and early 30's before the bomb, television and the computer. The campus consisted of Old Main, Bradley Hall, the Angel Factory, the gymnasium and the athletic field. On one side of the field was a decaying wooden grandstand that must have been built about the time of the Civil War. The science lab on the second floor made its presence known by the obnoxious odors which pervaded the halls. I often wonder what happened to the skeleton which hung in the room opposite the lab. We had to pass the lab to reach the auditorium where chapel services were conducted. Every student was expected to attend chapel services, which consisted of responsive readings from the Bible, a hymn or two, prayer and announcements. Guest speakers, usually Methodist ministers, were invited to speak to us frequently. Helen Keller appeared on our platform before she became internationally famous. On one occasion, Connie Mack, the legendary manager of the Philadelphia Athletics, entertained the student body with his humorous baseball anecdotes. The music department headed by Professor Harold Richey and Miss Marion Affhauser furnished outstanding short programs featuring the choral groups, musical ensembles and soloists. Mary Landon Russell was one of our favorite recitalists. On Fridays before an important game the coach would lead a rousing pep rally.

Directly in front of the entrance to the campus were the tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The passing trains were a nuisance and a constant distraction to the teachers and to the students. One of my earliest recollections was of the fatherly train watchman at the crossing giving us the nod when it was safe to cross. As you passed through the two graceful stone piers you entered into a different world. The symmetrical architecture of Old Main with its twin towers appears in my vision as a monument to the past that finally had to make way for the inevitable "progress." It is a tribute to the building that Old Main withstood the tempests as well as the countless vibrations of the bell that signaled the commencement of classes like a muezzin calling the faithful to prayer. The students who roomed on the top floor swore that they could feel the building sway during violent wind storms.

In warm weather the girls' gym class set up an archery range on a large corner lot opposite the popular "corner store." Fortunately, the instructor had the good sense to place the target at the track end rather than on the Fourth Street side. No casualties were ever reported by any passerby.

We day students were not restricted as were the boarding students. Boarding students who committed infractions of the rules such as staying out too late, cutting classes, or smoking on campus received demerits. For some infractions, errant students were placed on "slip campus," which meant that at the end of each period the instructor whose class he attended would sign the slip certifying to his attendance in class.

Various activities broke the monotony of the class. The chestnut hunt was fun. The name "chestnut" was a misnomer, a carryover from years long gone by. It was a one-day excursion into one of the scenic areas with which this area of Pennsylvania abounds. In the springtime the boys were permitted to visit the girls' dorms and vice versa at a date and time prearranged by the deans. Naturally, all souvenirs surreptitiously taken were triumphantly displayed. On occasions after a heavy snow you could expect a good snowball fight between the male students and the employees of the neighboring Flock's Brewery. Although the students had the advantage of more personnel, the brewery gang had the heavy artillery - they would pack snow around lumps of coal taken from the cars on the railroad siding and fire away. However, the most exciting events were the football, basketball and track events. The school band had only 10 or 12 members and the cheerleading corps numbered about two.

Before the junior college program there were two fraternities - Theta Pi Pi and Kappa Delta Pi. Later Sigma Lambda Chi appeared on the scene. Smoking and dancing on campus were strictly taboo. Inasmuch as chaperones were required at all frat coed parties, only those professors who were known to be tolerant were invited. The Thetas staged a good minstrel show in 1932 that was the talk of the town. Nobody took offense that the end men wore black faces. Everybody understood that it was all in fun without any thought of offending anyone. Even the faculty put on a great stage play of their own that year. In those days, the only acceptable four letter words on stage and screen were love and hate.

One of Dr. Long's favorite anecdotes was about William Cross. "Will," as he was affectionately known, was a jovial, good-natured black man, adored by the students, who served as a general helper and maintenance man. He drove the school's panel truck on which was printed the school's logo in Greek letters "Aletheia." Some person in town asked Will what it meant. Will answered, "I'm not sure, but I think that's what they teach up there." Dr. Long said that without knowing that the Greek word stood for "truth" Will had given the right answer, because that's what the seminary stood for.

If the 20's "roared" as they say, we never felt the impact. The 20's and 30's were sandwiched in between the two world wars. The pressures that depress today's academic community were nonexistent then. So much has happened to our world since 1934. The pleasant memories of dedicated teachers, good friends and classmates have become somewhat hazy, but not completely forgotten.

It has been a privilege to have been given this opportunity to review the past. I am confident that Dr. Frederick Blumer subscribes to the ideals advanced by Williamsport Dickinson Seminary and Dickinson Junior College - that he will continue to build upon the solid foundation laid by his predecessors. As long as Lycoming College accepts "Aletheia" as its philosophy of education, it will demand the highest standards from its faculty and from its students because only by maintaining the highest standards can any institution strive to achieve academic excellence.

The Day Martin Luther King Visited Lycoming

By: James W. Sheaffer

In 1957, President D. Frederick Wertz decided Lycoming College should have a strong chapel program. For nearly two decades thereafter, Lycoming offered a strong chapel program, and some of our more notable guests told us that it was very likely the finest of any college or university in the United States. Some of the well-known preachers or lecturers who graced our chapel pulpit were Walter Judd, Albert Outler, Paul Tillich, B. Davie Napier, Rabbi Jerome Malino, David H. C. Read, George Buttrick, E. William Muehl, Paul Scherer, and Edmund Steimle.

As Chairman of the Chapel Committee, I contacted Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., in October of 1957, and scheduled him for an appearance in Clarke Chapel the next April. Dr. King spoke at Bucknell on the morning of April 23, 1958, and in mid-afternoon I drove to Lewisburg and met him at the Bucknell guest house. We drove to the Lycoming Hotel (now Genetti) where a room had been reserved for him. I remember my impressions of the man. He was a gentle man, "low key," we might say today. It was easy to converse with him, and he asked as well as answered questions. He wanted to know the history and nature of Lycoming, and he inquired about the nature of the congregation he would face the next morning at 11:00.

After Dr. King checked in at the hotel we had dinner. Although I have forgotten the details of our dinner conversation, I recall his graciousness. Afterwards I took him to the Science Auditorium where he met informally with a number of faculty and staff.

"He was a gentle man, "low key"...

and he asked as well as answered questions. He wanted to know the history and nature of Lycoming..."

The next morning, a Thursday, he preached in chapel on the topic "A Great Time to be Alive," before which was read at his request the 13th Chapter of First Corinthians. Chapel was required, so most of the time seats were nearly filled. On this occasion there were a number of visitors from town so that the sanctuary was crowded, with standees in the back. He preached eloquently in a quiet and dignified manner, and the congregation was in rapt attention throughout. Afterwards he attended a noon luncheon in our dining room together with

For nearly two decades Lycoming offered a strong chapel program. Many guests believed it to be the finest of any college or university in the United States. about twelve persons from the faculty, staff, and student body. Around 1:30 he was taken to the airport for a flight to Philadelphia where he had more engagements.

We tried valiantly to have Dr. King return to the campus in the following years. He was scheduled for the following year, but a severe injury, sustained when he was attacked by a mad woman in Harlem, forced him to cancel many of his engagements. He again accepted a date for 1960, but in December, 1959, he wrote a long letter of regret, stating that his move from Montgomery to Atlanta forced him to cancel most of his commitments for 1960. We were persistent: he accepted a date for 1961, but by that time the demands of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference were too much, and he begged out. Subsequent invitations were issued in 1964 and 1965, but by this time it was apparent that he had too many other claims made upon him, so he had to forego the college circuits. We were fortunate to have had him with us for a day early in his career, and those of us who conversed with him and heard him preach will never forget him.

James Sheaffer is professor emeritus of music at Lycoming College.

WITH OUR THANKS!

As we now prepare for the many challenges and opportunities of a new academic year, we do so with excitement and a sense of anticipation. However, before becoming too involved with all the many tasks that are required of an institution of higher learning, we wanted to pause and gratefully express again those two important words, thank you, to everyone who made a great difference to the College. Your generosity enables us to continue our commitment to maintain quality educational programs which are designed to meet the educational needs of each student as an individual. We encourage your continued interest and involvement.

Lycoming Grad Audits The Pentagon

By: John David Cweiber

One of the nation's most influential accountants is an impressive, articulate, witty, and poised gentleman. He is also a 1962 graduate of Lycoming College.

Harold L. Stugart is the Auditor General for the United States Army and on a recent visit to Williamsport he spoke on topics from Army misappropriations of funds to the effects of the Gramm-Rudman Bill.

Stugart played an integral part in uncovering the ludicrous costs being charged to the Army by contractors. The highly publicized affair drew severe criticism from politicians and the public alike because of the misuse of taxpayer's dollars.

"We audited the Army's spare part program," Stugart recalls. "The public was shocked with revelations on high priced spare parts such as $700 hammers and coffee pots that went for about $5000. Other exorbitant costs included a toilet seat for several thousand dollars and nuts and bolts for approximately $300 each."

Stugart, sworn in as the Army's first Army Auditor General in 1979, feels that his office is doing everything possible to "overcome the problems," but he stresses that the only thing he can do is point out the problems. As auditors, if fraud is found, his office calls in the Army Criminal Investigation Command.

Stugart looks at his position as one that handles the front end of the process which makes sure that controls have been established and are working, as opposed to a reactive and prosecutorial position.

Concerning solutions on how to stop misappropriations of funds, the Hughesville native says that you will never be able to stop fraud completely, but that there are viable solutions which have been implemented. For instance, as Director of the Fraud Prevention Force six years ago, Stugart used the telephone as a combatant. "I set up the first hotline in the Federal Government that allowed John Q. Citizen to call in and make complaints about misappropriations and misuse of government funds."

"The public was shocked with revelations on high priced spare parts such as $700 hammers and coffee pots that went for about $5,000. Other exorbitant costs included a toilet seat for several thousand dollars and nuts and bolts for approximately $300 each."

President Reagan ordered a mandate which calls for increased competition for government contracts. Currently, the majority of the sales are made by a negotiation process as opposed to competitive billing. As a result of Reagan's action, the competition has risen from 35% to 50% this fiscal year.

To Stugart, the most appealing part of his position is that he is governed by very few restrictions. "I have as much independence as anyone could ask for. Moreover, I've never been asked not to audit something."

Stugart is in charge of a department that employs more than 800 people and has a budget of $38 million, with 8 million dollars designated for travelling costs. He believes, "You can't audit from a desk."

However, the Gramm-Rudman Bill may force him to cut out some department travel as well as other expenses. "The latest word I've heard is that President Reagan does not want to cut into defense spending, but it's (Gramm-Rudman) going to cause all of us to tighten up," Stugart points out.

Even if Stugart has to share his budget, the effectiveness of his office will not be hindered because federal law states that action must be taken on his office's reports within six months of issuance. Thus, every recommendation has to be acted upon or it is reported to Congress as an unresolved finding.

Stugart has faced many reporters in his high pressured position as Auditor General for the Army, which has him on the "hot seat," but he says in a tongue in cheek manner, that the toughest question he has had to answer was, "What did Lycoming College do for you?"

He admits that he hated the English Composition courses, "But they made me a good writer and professors like Logan Richmond (Professor of Accounting) instilled in me a good set of analytical tools so that I can probe into anything that the Army does," Taxpayers should feel quite at ease.

John David Cweiber is a 1986 graduate of Lycoming College with a B.A. in mass communication.

A License Plate That Says So Much More!

Every vehicle in Pennsylvania must have a license plate. Why not have one that makes a statement? One that identifies you to fellow-members of the Lycoming family? One that says you are proud of your alma mater?

The Alumni Association wishes to offer such a plate to the alumni, parents and friends of Lycoming College through PennDot's program. In order to do so, they must guarantee the sale of 500 plates. The cost, through the State, is $20.00 and is a one-time fee good for the life of the plate.

Please indicate your interest on the form below and return it promptly. Upon receipt of 500 replies, the application for the plate (see design) will be issued.

As we celebrate 175 years of educational excellence, let's have Lycoming College shine through on the blue and gold license plate!

_____ Yes, I would like to participate in the
